A Gift For a Soldier

Something that he will appreciate.
Something that will be useful to him wherever he goes and that will help him to keep happy and contented.

A SMILEAGE BOOK

will give him free entertainment at his training camp theatres under Government control.

Gen. Hugh Scott, commanding Camp Dix, says: "I can heartily endorse a scheme which puts before the men of my Command an opportunity to attend clean and interesting plays and entertainments. Their hours of drill and work are long, and during leave time it is to every one's advantage that the enlisted men be entertained, particularly in view of the great change in conditions under which the soldier lives as contrasted with those to which he was formerly accustomed in civil life."

Every man selected for military service should leave Chattanooga with a Smilage Book in his pocket. You cannot give him a nicer parting gift.

AMERICAN SACRIFICES KEEP ENGLAND WELL-FED

New Head British Food Control Pays Tribute to U. S. Spirit of Patriotism.

(Associated Press.)
London, July 12.—Food control in England probably will continue for at least a short while after the ending of hostilities, according to John R. Clynes, the new head of the food ministry. Discussing this subject with the Daily Telegraph, the new controller says:

"Whether the food ministry will be continued after the war depends on how long the war lasts, but it is clear the conditions created will not suddenly disappear when it is ended as for a considerable time the allied nations will be required to act in co-operation both as regards supplies and prices until normal conditions reappear. Unfortunately, these conditions will be delayed until the forces of food production can be brought to a point where all kinds of necessities again are bountiful. When that time arrives it will be for the nation to say whether it is prepared to go back and pursue the usual channels."

Regarding aid from overseas, Mr. Clynes said:

Indebtedness Not Realized.
"People of this country have little idea of our indebtedness to America and the colonies for the abundance and regularity of our food supplies. Conditions of transport have improved enormously."

The food controller paid tribute to the American "spirit of patriotism," which has been willing to undergo sacrifices in order to feed England. He said he would welcome H. C. Hoover, the American food administrator, who is expected in England shortly, and also the opportunity of discussing with him many of the great questions of the food problem.

"The policies of the late Viscount Rhonda would be continued by the ministry," Mr. Clynes declared. "The ministry would try to maintain the population in the highest state of efficiency, making distribution as equitable as possible."

"The best and inferior grades of meat," continued Mr. Clynes, "all now go to the well-to-do districts and poorer districts and all classes are paying the same price for an equal share of the best and worst portions."

Their Conception of Peace.

(Springfield Republican.)
So often are the German people told by their public men and their press that the enemy can have peace at any time and that Germany wants only honorable terms consistent with her "vital interests," that Premier Lloyd George did well to say in his recent speech to the American troops that the Germans "can have peace tomorrow," if they desire it on terms just and honorable. They will not be required to surrender "a single yard of German soil," as the premier declared. The German conception of a just and honorable peace, however, was disclosed at Brest-Litovsk in a treaty that took more than 50,000,000 people out of the Russian empire, and at Bucharest in a treaty that has left Rumania scarcely more than a "geographical expression."

Old World and New Men.

(London Daily Mail.)
Now America is sending her men into Europe by the hundred thousand. Day by day they are looting greater and greater in our lives. A week ago I was in Winchester, the ancient capital of England. In these picturesque old streets, under the shadow of the statue of King Alfred, I saw an American company marching. A few days before that I was in another part of the south of England and I found whole stretches of country being cleared and tents and huts being put up. "What is this for?" I asked. "This," said my friend, "is for the American troops who are coming here to be trained." On Sunday evening I looked in at the Palace theater. A despairing attendant shook his head. "There's not room to squeeze your foot in," he said. But even despairing attendants can be persuaded to modify their views. I walked at the back of the aisles and found them crowded with soldiers, standing up, while every seat was occupied. Then, locating some friends in the stage box, I went around to them. From there I could get a view of the great theater, packed as I have never seen it packed with American soldiers. A famous American admiral was in the stalls just in front of me. Soldiers and officers and nurses crowded everywhere. The initials "U. S.," "U. S. R." and "U. S. A." on the coat collars told all the branches of the service that were represented, regulars, state militia and national army.

This was the Sunday evening entertainment now being arranged for the American troops. Even the brilliant performance on the stage, where the greatest English entertainers gladly gave their services, could not draw one's eyes from the scene in the body of the theater itself. And when, after a little while, we all stood to attention and the band played the American and the British national anthems, I am not ashamed to admit that for a minute or two I could not see clearly; and I certainly would not have liked to venture to talk. For it came to me what this thing meant—the two great Anglo-Saxon nations joining hands in the fight for world liberty.

What impresses every one here who has come in contact with the Americans is the simplicity, sincerity and the whole-heartedness of the men of our ally. Many people imagined that the Americans would come among us boasting, shouting about what they were going to do and telling us what mighty fine fellows they were. On the contrary they are modest, quiet, very hard working, eager to learn and desirous of obtaining the best of our experience. The Americans may have made mistakes. We have made plenty. But the delay in the arrival of their armies has helped all the more to bring them just at the right time.

IDENTIFY SOLDIERS BY NUMBERS IN WATCHES

Amsterdam, June 12.—(Correspondence Associated Press.)—The first number of a novel casualty list has just appeared in Germany. It contains the numbers of watches found among the belongings of men killed in action who cannot be otherwise identified. Watches when sold or repaired are usually marked and numbered by the watchmaker and recorded, and the German military authorities, by circulating this new casualty list among watchmakers throughout Germany, hope to establish the identity of many dead soldiers.
